QUEEN'S UNIVERSITY

KINGSTON, ONTARIO

FOUNDED in 1841 and for many years nurtured by the Presbyterian Church of Canada until it became independent a decade ago, Queen's has come to be one of the foremost universities in the Dominion, the registered students in its three faculties of Arts, Medicine and Applied Science and in the affiliated Theological College now numbering about 2,900, including also those of the Summer School.

No university could be more fortunate in its environment. Kingston is an ideal college town in situation, size, tradition and character. Established as a fortified trading post by Frontenac and La Salle two centuries and a half ago, it is the oldest city in Canada west of Montreal, and the striking evidences on every hand of its long and distinguished history give it an aspect at once unique and picturesque.

The spacious grounds of Queen's are in the western part of the city, overlooking Lake Ontario, and form a worthy setting for the stately college halls of grey limestone which year by year are steadily growing in number. There is now being erected upon the water front the new central heating and power plant, while this summer ground will be broken for the much-needed Library and Administration building, and it is expected that within a year or two work will also be begun on the projected Women's Residence and Union, for which an attractive site has been provided.

These views, it is hoped, will serve to emphasize the beauty and strength of this progressive University.
